

Bio

Brooke Brown graduated from SCA 2002 and has been a storyteller for as long as she can remember. Creating captivating stories has always been her way of living beyond her limitations. She earned a bachelors degree in Journalism and Mass Communication from the Walter Cronkite School at Arizona State University where she received the Walter Cronkite Outstanding Undergraduate Award. She is the author of The Little Butterfly Girl, the Transforming the Heart of YOUR Story workbook, and a devotional titled ADAPT. In addition, she is the communication specialist for Dr. John Trent's StrongFamilies.com, a freelance magazine writer, and an actor and playwright in Theatre 360 acting troupe. Brooke has also been asked to speak at many community events, sharing her life experiences with cerebral palsy to inspire others who are facing profound life challenges. She will always love and continue to use the written word to communicate her stories to the outside world. However, she knows she's not the only one with a story to tell. Therefore, Brooke has a passion for using her storytelling skills in the service of others. Along with her work at Strong Families, she runs a creative storytelling ministry called Brooke's Butterfly Touch, which encourages people to discover the power in sharing their own stories in order to bring hope, and understanding to others.
